Substance Use Treatment in CANADA*

The National Treatment Indicators project collects data, called indicators, on publicly funded, specialized, community-based treatment services.*

As part of this project, jurisdictions are working toward reporting a core set of indicators to:

Assess the capacity of treatment services

Identify substance use trends across Canada

Support investment in treatment services

Substance Use Treatment

Counselling

Residential services

Withdrawal management

Specialized, community-based services

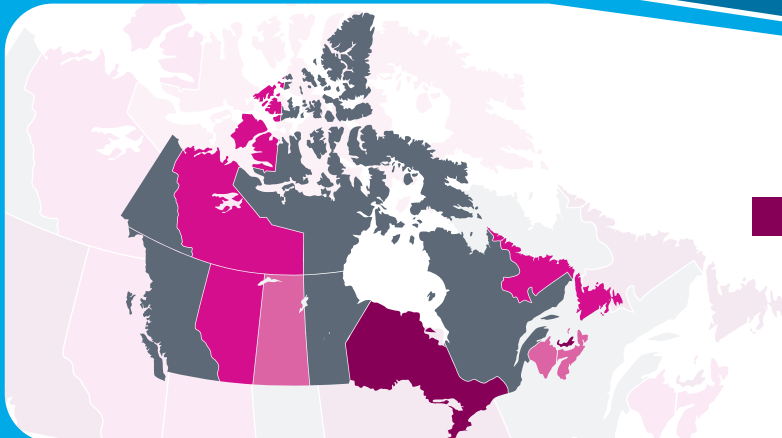

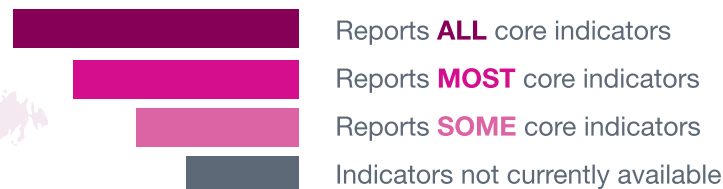

Physician-based services

Hospital-based services

- ✓ These services are designed to help individuals stop or reduce harmful substance use.
- ✓ Provision of these services varies across jurisdictions.

These outcomes ensure effective treatment services are available for Canadians.

*Excludes hospital-based and physician-based services
